

Without the right medication, Colin could die. He's not the only one dependent on our pharmacists.

Colin has deep vein thrombosis. A life threatening condition, requiring continuous treatment and medication. It was after the diagnosis that Colin met the person who would be responsible for keeping him alive. As the medicines expert on the team, the pharmacist influences everyone who is involved in Colin's treatment, including Colin's local GP and community pharmacist, who are continuing his treatment, now he's left hospital. If you think you could be a NHS Pharmacist, you'll see how the NHS is changing. Increasing opportunities for training and scope for career development. And valuing you as an essential member of the healthcare team. Why not call us today on 0845 60 60 655 or go to www.nhs.uk/careers

Chloe has suspected meningitis. 37 people are relying on an accurate test result.

Minutes after being admitted to A&E, Chloe's blood and spinal fluid samples were sent down to the lab. There, they were analysed by a dedicated team of scientists. It wasn't just test tubes they held in their hands but a real life. Chloe's life. Providing crucial information that the patient, their family and the entire medical team were counting on. If you think you could be a bio-medical scientist, you'll find the NHS is improving. Providing scope for greater career progression and more flexible working conditions. Plus the pay is getting better. In fact, salaries start at £15,793 p.a. for a newly qualified full time bio-medical scientist increasing to over £37,000 p.a. for senior biomedical scientists and a pay increase is due from April 2003. For a year, Jill's been battling breast cancer. 25 people are helping her fight it.

Cancer. Like most, Jill thought it would never happen to her. She eats healthily. Takes regular exercise. So you can only imagine her shock when she was faced with the news. Luckily with the help of radiographers, it was detected and treated early enough to do something about it. As part of the breast care team, the radiographers need to be there for patients like Jill. There, to allay their fears by taking time to explain the process and advising her on the appropriate care throughout her treatment. If you think you could be a NHS Radiographer, you'll see how the NHS is changing. Increasing opportunities for training and scope for career development. And valuing you as an essential member of the healthcare team.
